Dr. Carol Duncan Clayton, Translational Neuroscience Strategist with CMT, a Relias Learning Company, Participates in Peer Review Study with Genoa

Morrisville, N.C. (Monday August 22, 2016) - Dr. Carol Duncan Clayton, Translational Neuroscience Strategist with CMT, a Relias Learning Company, recently participated in a new peer-reviewed study with Genoa. The research study demonstrates Genoa's integrated care model, featuring onsite pharmacies within community mental health centers produces higher medication adherence rates than community pharmacies. The research, published in the Journal of Managed Care & Specialty Pharmacy, also shows lower rates of hospitalization and lower emergency department utilization for the patients that visit Genoa's onsite pharmacies.

W. Abel Wright, MS; Jack M. Gorman, MD, Melissa Odorzynski, PharmD, MPH, and Mark J. Peterson, RPh, Genoa, a QoL Healthcare Company, Eagan, Minnesota were co-authors of the study. "It was an honor to collaborate with the best thinkers in the business on this very important research", says Dr. Clayton. "We're excited to contribute to important research that will help our customers who manage complex behavioral health populations improve the quality of care and lower costs for their population. The leadership team at Genoa were great partners. It was exciting to join forces with another mission driven company in evaluating their particular approach to improving the health and care of vulnerable populations."
